

The National Archives

Chicken tikka masala c.1810

Outreach & Inclusion Manager

£30,000 - £35,000 + generous benefits package • Kew, West London

If George III, Jane Austen or the Duke of Wellington fancied a curry in 1810, they only had to pop down to Sake Dean Mahomed's Hindoostanee Coffee House in George Street, London.

Britain's first Indian restaurant is just one example of a multicultural history that stretches back centuries. As an Outreach and Inclusion Manager you'll use stories like these to inspire people to find out about their pasts, and connect to their own personal histories.

You'll be focusing on groups who wouldn't normally consider using The National Archives, so it's a role for a decidedly creative thinker. As well as developing an events programme that sparks the interest of a broad mix of cultural groups, you'll promote diversity and social inclusion across the organisation. You'll have devised and implemented a similar policy before – and you'll also offer outstanding communication skills.

Find out more and apply at nationalarchives.gov.uk/jobs

Closing date: 25th April 2008.

We are striving towards equality of opportunity and will consider all applicants fairly and on merit.

History. Your story.

Awarded for excellence

INVESTOR IN PEOPLE